Lily Rockefeller is a writer who covers literature for ThoughtCo. She holds a master's in German Literature from the University of Oxford. President and COO, Long-Distance Division Sprint Corp. Kansas City, Missouri. Title page from John Dickinson's Letters from a Farmer in Pennsylvania. It's hard to admit that your work life is out of control. I loved my job at Nike, but it was all-consuming. I had no life. My housekeeper was spending more time at my house than I was. I reached a point where I could not remember the last time I had slept in my own bed. I love summers in Oregon, but I was never there long enough to enjoy one. But the real indicator that my life was out of whack came when I got a call from my brother, Brendan. He'd been trying to reach me for several weeks. I was always too "busy" to call him back. When we finally connected, he told me that he'd had to do a Lexis-Nexis search on me to figure out where I was that week. I was being Lexis-Nexised by my own brother! That really made me stop and think. Six months later, I took a sabbatical—to my backyard. My goal? Not to leave the state of Oregon for two months. There were days when I didn't even leave my house. I hoped I could restructure my job at Nike so that I could have a life outside of the company. But although I knew I wanted to do less, I couldn't pass up the interesting projects that kept coming across my desk. I realized that a corporation as large as Nike has an "all or nothing at all" environment. To achieve balance in my life, I needed to create more variety. So I quit. Instead of having one big job, I now divide my work time into thirds: business consulting, public service, and creative projects. You don't have to sit on top of a mountain to discover what's right for you. You always know in your heart what you need to do. But you do have to ask yourself if you're willing to make choices. Put yourself in a position where you're making choices about your life, rather than letting other people make those choices for you. That's what balance is all about. Liz Dolan left a very big job— as vice president of global marketing at Nike— to take on three small jobs. Dolan St. Clair is a marketing company that works with no more than three clients at any one time. Dolan is also on the board of governors of the Boys & Girls Clubs of America. A few months after I was promoted to general counsel, I was dashing through the airport when I stopped to buy a book. One title caught my eye: "Care of the Soul," by Thomas Moore (HarperCollins Publishers, 1992). I grabbed it, immediately lost my composure, and began to cry. I'm a very self-contained person. But there I was, having a nervous breakdown in the airport. Over time, I began to understand why. I was depressed. I felt that I had no control over my life. I spent every day giving— to my work and to my family. There was no reserve left for me. I had gotten into a cycle where I was incapable of wringing one drop of time to nurture and sustain myself. As a member of my company's operating committee, I felt that I needed to be 100% accessible 100% of the time. I created a situation where I could never be "off." To me, balance is an illusion— and to have it as a goal is self-defeating. Instead, take advantage of whatever trade-offs you can make. I don't know how much faster and harder we all can go. There has to be a breaking point. Maybe then we'll be able to slow down and accept a certain level of tedium and repetition. We might have fewer toys, but we'd be able to simplify our world and to enjoy life. RELATED: CONSUMER LAWS YOU NEED TO KNOW ABOUT. Tips on Finding and Choosing an Acting Agent. To help pay its massive debts from the Seven Years' War (1756–1763), the British Parliament—at the advice of Charles Townshend, the Chancellor of the British Exchequer—voted to levy new taxes on the American colonies. Anxiety has become a prevalent problem in the U.S. in recent years with over 40 million people afflicted. Anxiety disorders cost the United States over $42 billion a year, nearly one-third of the country's entire mental health bill. Consequently, millions of prescriptions are doled out for anxiolytic (anti-anxiety) meds like Ativan and Xanax. They are some of the most commonly prescribed drugs on the market and most of them are benzodiazepines. The precise method of action by which "benzos" work is only somewhat understood, but they are thought to hike up levels of gamma-aminobutyric acid ( GABA ), the calming neurotransmitter in our brains. Others believe that benzodiazepines increase GABA receptor sensitivity. There is no shortage of benzo drugs including Dalmane, Librium, Klonopin, Restoril, Valium, and Serax. These drugs are effective at combating anxiety or alleviating panic attacks. They go to work fast with users experiencing relief within 30 to 60 minutes of taking them and their effects can last for anywhere from 11 to 20 hours. But there are many reasons one should avoid taking these prescription medications. For one, they have a profound potential for abuse or addiction.

Someone addicted to Xanax may take as many as 20 or 30 pills per day! The tolerance that addicts develop to these substances leads to dangerous habits with many attempting to inject their Xanax dose intravenously. Fatal overdoses from drugs like Xanax is also not uncommon.
